

Soul Explorer.

a gentle guide

How to prepare for your session

There is nothing you need to do to be “ready.” Your soul already is. This guide is simply here to help you arrive soft, open, and unhurried.

one Write your questions

The heart of your session is your list of questions, everything you'd ask if you could speak directly to the wisest part of yourself. Don't edit or rank them. Write freely in the days before; the important ones rise to the top on their own.

Consider questions about your body (symptoms, energy, sleep), your relationships, your purpose and path, and anything that's felt unexplained for a long time. A few starting lines:

two Prepare your body

- ✓ Sleep well the night before, if you can. Rested is better than wired.
- ✓ Eat lightly beforehand, enough to be comfortable, not so much you feel heavy.
- ✓ Go easy on caffeine that morning, so your body can soften.
- ✓ Wear something loose and warm. Bodies cool as they relax deeply.

three Prepare your heart

The single most helpful thing you can bring is a willingness to trust whatever comes, without deciding in advance what it should look like. Some people see vivid scenes; others feel, hear, or simply know. There is no wrong way, and no such thing as “doing it badly.”

In the days before, you might gently set an intention: I am open to receiving exactly what I need. That's enough.

four On the day

- ✓ Allow 4-5 hours and nothing pressing afterward, give yourself space to land.
- ✓ For online (BQH): a quiet room, a bed or sofa, headphones, and a stable connection.
- ✓ Have water nearby and your list of questions within reach.
- ✓ Afterward, be gentle. Drink water, rest, and let the insights keep unfolding.

When you're ready, I'll be here.

Alex