

Guidelines – Choosing to Accept a Client, or not

The most important consideration when a BQH Practitioner makes the decision to accept or decline a client should rest upon the wisdom of their very own intuition. Even if your client presents more than one “reason” from the list below which might help you decide, there is no more powerful factor that I recommend you consider than what your very own gut tells you. This instinct will become stronger the more clients you see and the more you practice.

Consider the below merely suggested guidelines. Many experienced practitioners will tell you that some of their best clients may not have started with the best indicators!

Positive Indicators

- The client contacted you for a session, and not the other way around
- The client is enthusiastic about BQH or Quantum Healing or the idea of Past Life Regression in general
- The client seems motivated to create real change in their life
- The client seems to be open-minded in general
- The client is open-minded about alternative therapies or alternative healthcare
- The client has experienced alternative approaches
- The client has experienced a hypnosis session previously
- The client has experienced shamanic journeying or creative visualizations
- The client seems to have a generally stable life- even if there are many challenges, trauma or health concerns
- The client is able to communicate clearly, and you are able to understand them clearly (language barriers, accents, technologies or hearing impairments are important to consider)
- The client’s regular therapist, if they have one, is supportive about a BQH session

Negative Indicators

- The client wants to prove that quantum healing does not work
- The client is outright negative or hostile about any alternative therapy or thought
- The client asks for a guaranteed outcome
- The client asks for a particular or detailed outcome in advance
- The client talks about or wants you to heal them or remove their challenge for them
- The client does not believe in realities other than the measurable physical universe
- The client is one who “shops around” a singular problem for many years and blames all “failed” sessions upon the “other method” or “other practitioner”
- The client states outright or alludes to being diagnosed with severe mental illness (such as schizophrenia, dissociative disorder, multiple personality disorder)
- The client is on psychotropic drugs of any kind
- The client seems or exhibits paranoia of any type

- The client has an extreme history of PTSD from ritualistic abuse or has come from a warzone situation and exhibits extreme anxiety and fear about consciousness exploration. (Very experienced practitioners might be perfectly fine with this client. Not recommended for beginners)
- The client is trying to “prove” something in regard to a legal matter
- The client wants to control every aspect of the session before it even begins, to include the particulars like when/where/how
- The client complains about how you run your practice and wants you to outright change your policies or standards
- The client wants an immediate discount or a free session and complains about your regular fee
- The client excessively “badmouths” other practitioners or methods in a gossipy way.

Borderline Indicators

- Family members. Spouses, parents and children can be some of your toughest clients as they are not the best to practice on when you are new. (even though many of us started that way.)
- Clients focused upon being overtaken or controlled by “entities”. (Some of you may have additional skills or tools to handle this type of client.)
- Clients who are extremely focused upon or being “controlled by the government” (Some of you may have additional skills or tools to handle this type of client.)
- Clients who have had Quantum Healing sessions with other practitioners and found them all to be lacking or ineffective and/or blames each for their “failure”. (Some of you may very well have an excellent session with this type of client, and it may have to do with expectations OR the readiness of the client themselves.)
- The client is on a variety of sedatives, pain meds and or anti-depressants
- The client is quite elderly – (May not hear well, family may not be supportive, may not have cognitive function, due to medication, etc.)
- The client is a child – (Parents must approve, and it is suggested a release be signed, child must themselves be relatively mature, child must themselves want or are seeking the session, and not to just please a parent) Children as young as 9 or 10 have been successfully regressed, but it is not generally recommended.
- The client is hearing impaired or deaf
