

Client Debrief Checklist

What does your client remember? Go over main events/points if necessary.

It's not necessary to go over all the details, but do ask them if they have any questions (reminding them that all information will be available in the audio recording).

Ask them how long they were in trance to gauge their own sense of time passing. Often a much longer time has passed than they might realize. (an hour and a half session feeling like 20 minutes as an example) This is literally time-travel and helps reinforce the legitimacy of the experience.

Report any super-normal events that you observed or experienced (orbs, energy change, unusual body movements, light flashes, sparkles, etc.).

Remain positive and upbeat about any outcome. If doubts are raised re-assure and suggest the client remain open to future change/outcome.

Is the client fully present and awake? Do they need more grounding? Suggest grounding methods if necessary and caution against driving a car until a meal has been eaten and sufficient time has passed.

Remind them how they will receive their recording or provide it to them with coaching that the maximum effect will be realized with frequent and repeated listening to the recording and it should be done in a quiet and safe space (not driving for example). Remind them to let you know how they are doing or that you will contact them if that is your practice. If they feel so inclined, reviews are welcome.