

Grounding – Definition and Procedures

What is grounding? Grounding and being grounded means connecting with the present, being in the now and physically, spiritually, mentally, emotionally and energetically rooted.

It is important for you to make sure your client is grounded, wide awake and ready to get back to their day especially if they are going to get into a car and drive. Watch them closely during the debrief and suggest additional grounding if necessary.

Grounding ideas:

1. Eating. Any food will do, but, root vegetables – those grown in the ground are known to be especially good for grounding. Protein is good, too, nuts are ideal and easy to keep around.
2. Touching the earth with bare feet or touching or hugging a tree is wonderful grounding technique. Concrete is a “rock” created material and can stand in for the earth if need be.
3. Rocks and crystals such as black tourmaline or shungite also help ground. Hold them in both hands or on solar plexus.
4. Salt is very grounding and cleansing. You can have some around or suggest this for your client when they get home or if they are home already.
5. There are grounding essential oils one can diffuse or use in a base of olive oil and rub on one’s feet. Some top grounding oils are Vetiver, Sandalwood, Cedarwood, Frankincense, Myrrh and Patchouli.
6. Grounding exercise: Have your client imagine that there are roots coming out of their feet. Have the roots go very deep into the Earth and wrap around a rock or something deep within the planet.
Now imagine a yellow/amber light coming up your ‘roots’. Have the light come all the way up your roots and into your body, first your feet, up your legs, through your torso, up to your neck down your arms and into your head. Feel the loving energy of this light all through you. Have it be a part of you. This light and energy helps to ground you, much like a tree has roots. Remember to say thank you to the Earth/Gaia for her assistance.
