

Session Type: Human Parallel Life or Future Life

Definition

How can you tell?

The story begins usually with the client ending up saying something like, “Well it is me, but I am a musician living in New York and not an accountant living in Chicago.” Or they may say, “Its me, but I am much older, and my kids are grown and gone, not toddlers like they are now.”

What is the story? Let's find out.

Parallel Life - The most important things to find out are the details about how this version of their life is different from their current life. You might be able to have your client TALK to their parallel self and/or learn about choices, etc.

Future Life - The most important things to find out are what choices brought them to the experiences they are having there. Are these experiences or is this future one that the client seems pleased about? Ask how to draw that life to them. Most future life sessions are presented to clients to find out this information. I have not yet had one that focused upon lower vibrational choices, etc., and would seem like a future they would not want.

Move through important events or important days as in any session. 3 days/events are common but it might be only one or it might be 5 or 7.

Asking for the client to move to the "the last day of that life" to find out about how they pass is not usually recommended. The reason is the same as if they were experiencing their own actual current life. Its not usually beneficial or comfortable to know or even think about the time and reason for passing. But do not fret if they do go there by themselves. Ask who is with them, how they are passing and that they do not need to experience it directly if they don't wish. They can watch it "as a movie" or "from above."

After they pass, you can ask who is there to meet them (if any). You can ask what happens next - or you can ask to speak to the inner wisdom, Higher Self, the healing team or ask for a spirit guide to take them to these places.

You can remind your client (if they seem to be stalling or struggling) that they must lend their voice to any of these beings who are there to be able to hear them. They can- they should- imagine what those beings would say.
