

Practitioner Preparation Before a Session

- Be early. It's important to have a few moments of silence before you welcome your client.
- Your Frequency Preparation is up to you, but do realize everything you do, or do not do, affects your session. Try not to schedule a session right after something stressful!
- Many practitioners meditate, bathe or pray before a session.
- I suggest eating beforehand if possible, but something light over anything heavy.
- Your appearance matters. Some practitioners only wear white or special clothing. Be comfortable but pay attention to how you present yourself to your clients.
- You may be sitting for a few hours. A good long walk or some yoga before a session is a great idea.
- Grounding is helpful for some, you can do this while walking or by intention.
- Some practitioners light candles, smudge their space, light incense, play solfeggio music or set out crystals. Others do space clearing ceremonies or rituals. You can make one up yourself!
- IN-PERSON sessions. Cleanliness is important. Clutter is a distraction. Create a quiet atmosphere if possible. Ready your space with blankets, pillows, tissues, water and toiletries in the restroom.
- Check recording equipment and replace batteries if necessary. ALWAYS have extra batteries.
- Turn off phones after client's arrival.
- ONLINE sessions. Make sure you have room to record your session on the computer or in the cloud. Make sure you have a power cord and back up cell phone charged. Clutter is a distraction online as well, and so is poor lighting, consider what your client will see on their screen. Create a quiet atmosphere and consider internet usage and your data plans as well as your internet signal.
