Alternative Methods To Hypnosis

House Method

A second method that I have found to be successful is to have them see the house they are presently living in in this life time. This is easy for them to visualize, because they see it every day. They will not realize what you are doing, and will relax and describe the outside of their house. They are no longer feeling pressure, and the need to perform. After they describe the exterior of their house, I ask them, how do they go into the house? When they tell you, then have them enter the house and describe the first room that they enter. If you want, you can have them describe other rooms in the house, including the kitchen. Then I have them go to the room where they sleep, and describe that (furniture, etc.) Then I have them look at the walls, and find a wall that does not have a door. When they have done this, I ask them to make a door appear in a wall that does not normally have a door. When they do this, I have them open the door. I tell them they will see steps going down, down in front of them. (Notice the deepening technique from the use of words.) I tell them to go down the steps, and then they will see a long hallway going away from them. There is enough light so they can see to walk down the hallway. Then I tell them they will see many doors, one after the other, on the left hand side of the hallway. When they do this, I have them choose one of the doors. When they have chosen a door, I ask them to describe it. This can often be a clue in itself (a modern door, an ancient door, a metal door, a door with a big knocker, etc.). Then I tell them to open the door they have chosen, and go inside. Then I ask them to describe what they see inside the door. With this method they will usually find themselves inside, while the cloud method will invariably put them outside. There is no hard, fast rule, but this is the majority. By the time they have gone through all this, they are deeper and trust the images they are getting. You follow by asking questions and getting them to describe what they are seeing. Never be in a hurry to move them away from the scene. We have had enough trouble getting them to see something, let them solidify it before moving into the story.

See the house you presently live in. It is very easy for you to visualize because you see it every day. Can you describe the exterior of the house for me?

How do you usually go into the house? Ok, I want you to enter the house and describe the first room you enter (if you want, have them describe other rooms in the house, including the kitchen.)

Now I want you to go to the room where you sleep and describe that (furniture, etc.)

Now look at the walls, and find a wall that does not have a door. Make a door appear in this wall. I want you to open that door and you will see steps going down, down in front of you.

Go down the steps and you will see a long hallway going away from you. There are many doors, one after another, on the left hand side of the hallway. I want you to choose one of the doors and describe it to me (is it a modern door, ancient door, metal door, door with a big knocker or what?).

Ok now I want you to open the door you have chosen, and go inside. Describe what you see inside the door (follow by asking questions and getting them to describe what they are seeing).

Current Life Method

Another non-threatening method to get them to visualize is to have them see something from their current life. They know what has happened in their present life, they don't have to worry about whether or not they are making something up. I ask them to see an important day in this life, when something was happening that made them happy. They normally go there immediately and start telling you what is going on. Let them describe it until it is solid, then tell them to move further back in this life (you are growing younger, etc.), to another day when something was happening that made them happy. Many people are afraid they will see something horrible if they regress to another lifetime. Maybe they did something awful, or something terrible was done to them. This can cause resistance. If you ask them to go to a happy day in this life, they will not see it as a threat, and will describe it. We keep moving back in time as they grow younger. Back to when they were a child, then a toddler, then a baby. They will see these things, even if they question it. "I see a baby in a crib. Is that me?" Then I ask them to move to an appropriate time and space before they were born. Many things can happen here: They may go to the womb, they may go to the spirit side and review their plans for entering the present life or they may go into a past life. Or they may not do any of the above. If it doesn't work, there are always other methods. It just depends on how patient you are. Normally any one of these will work, unless you have a stubborn case. Then you have to keep switching methods on them until you finally break down their resistance and dissolve the barrier. It will happen if you persist.

See an important day from your current life; a day when something was happening that made you happy. Now I want you to move back further in this life, you are growing younger to another day when something was happening that made you happy. What do you see?

(Move them back to when they were a child, then a toddler, then a baby).

Now I want you to move to an appropriate time and space before you were born.

(They may go to the womb, the spirit side and review their plans for entering the present life, a past life or even none of the above).

Calling Their Guide or Guardian Angel

Another method that is effective, especially if the client has fear of the process (and you may never know if they do or not, until later) is to call in their guide or guardian angel. Sometimes they may unconsciously be afraid of going off on their own. I usually ask them if they believe they have a guide or guardian angel. They will normally say that they do. Then I ask them if they would like to meet their guide. There is usually an anticipation to do so. This method is effective if they are still wandering around in the colors, and can't find anything to see. I tell them that they will see their guide or guardian angel coming towards them through the colors. I tell them it can look any way they want it to. Then I ask them to describe it. This method is not 100%, but it is effective and a good alternative. When they see the guide and describe it (it doesn't matter what they say), then I ask them if they want to go with it. They usually agree, because they feel safe with it and trust it. I tell them that their guide is holding out their hand, and ask them to take their hand and go with them. That their guide is going to take them to see something that is important. If they have difficulty seeing anything coming toward them, there is another version of this same method.

Do you believe that you have a guardian angel? Would you like to meet your guide?

You will see your guide or guardian angel coming to you through colors. It can look any way you want. Do you see your guide or guardian angel? Describe it for me. You are safe with your guide because you trust it. Your guide is holding out its hand, and asking you to take its hand and go with them. Do you want to go with your guide? Your guide is going to take you to see something important. Take your guide's hand and they will take you where you need to go.

Alternative Version for Guide or Guardian Angel

I have them visualize a big hill with lots of trees and vegetation. They see a path going up the hill. Then I ask them to walk up the hill to the top, describing what they see around them on the path, as they walk up. When they reach the top of the hill, I tell them they are standing inside a small grove of trees. When they walk out of the grove of trees, they will see a clearing in front of them. On the other side of the clearing is another small grove of trees. I tell them that their guide or guardian angel is standing inside that grove of trees. And as they watch he will come out and stand in the clearing. I ask the client to describe what they see. Then I have the person walk out into the clearing, and take the guide's hand. Then the guide can take them where they have to go.

See a big hill with lots of trees and vegetation. See a path going up, up the hill. Walk up to the top of the hill. And describe what you see around you on the path as you walk up.

Now that you have reached the top of the hill, you are standing inside a small grove of trees. As you walk up to the small grove of trees, you will see a clearing in front of you. On the other side of the clearing is another small grove of trees.

As you watch, your guide will come out and stand in the clearing. Describe now what you see.

Your guide is holding out its hand, and asking you to take its hand and go with them. Do you want to go with your guide?

Your guide is going to take you to see something important. Now I want you to walk out into the clearing and take your guide's hand. Your guide will take you where you need to go.

Building Method

Another method that I very seldom use is the office building. I do not use it that often, because it is tricky and not as reliable. I have the person visualize an office building, very tall with many, many floors. I have them go inside the office building and stand in the lobby, and describe it. Then I ask them to find the elevator that goes up, up in the building. They usually find it quite easily. They are told to enter the elevator, and push the button that closes the door. They will see many lights with numbers on them that are the many, many floors in this building. I ask them to push the button of the floor they want to go to. I ask them what number it was that they chose. This can be a clue (sometimes the button they push is a year instead of a number). When they push the button I ask them to feel the elevator going up, up in the building. And to tell me when the elevator slows down and stops at the floor they have picked. It may take a few seconds, but they will say they have stopped at the floor. Then I have them push the button that opens the door, and ask them to tell me the first thing they see as the door comes open. As they describe it I ask them to step out of the elevator, and go into the scene. This method can work, but it is unpredictable, and not as reliable as the other methods. It depends on how analytical, controlling or materialistic the subject is. The reason it is unpredictable is because, when the elevator door comes open, some people see what you would expect to see in an office building: an office with desks, etc. If this happens, I ask them if they want to get off the elevator and go out. If they do, then I have them walk down a hallway looking for something else. Sometimes they will find it. Another alternative is to have them get back on the elevator and try another floor. If they still just see an office or something modern, I have them get back on the elevator and ask them, how many floors does this building have? When they tell me, I then ask them to push the top floor button and then proceed beyond that and go through the roof of the building. And when they do, the walls of the elevator are made out of glass and they can see through them. They usually like this, and they feel safe because they are enclosed, and because they are outside looking down at the surroundings. Very similar to the cloud method. I then tell them to allow the elevator to take them anywhere they want to go.

See a building, very tall with many, many floors on it. Do you see a building?

Ok go inside the building, stand in the lobby and describe it. Now I want you to find an elevator that goes up, up in the building. Enter the elevator, and push the button that closes the door. You will see many lights with numbers on them that are the many, many floors in this building. Push the button of the floor you want to go to. What number was it you chose?

Now that you've pushed the button, feel the elevator going up, up in the building. The walls of the elevator are made out of glass and you can see through them. Because the elevator is enclosed you are safe and you may look down at the surroundings. Allow the elevator to take you anywhere you want to go. Let me know when the elevator slows down and stops at the floor you've picked.

Now push the button that opens the door and tell me what's the first thing you see as the door comes open. Step out of the elevator and go into the scene you are describing.

Magic Carpet Method

This brings up another point. Sometimes when using the cloud method, the person floats up to the cloud and discovers it is a magic carpet. This is all right. It can be anything they want it to be. There is no right or wrong. They can go wherever their mind wants to take them. In This case, I use the same instructions as the cloud method and have them come back down at the appropriate place.

Also occasionally they don't want to come down from the cloud. They want to go up and out into space. If they do, let them. Don't try to make them obey strict rules. This places limitations on them, and they resist it.

Any Place or Any Time Method

Another method is to have the person go to any place or any time they want to. “If you could go to any place or any time, where would you go?” This method has its limitations because later the person would say they only made it up. But it is a way to break through their barriers and get the visualization started. Remember, all of this is just a way to get them to see things. When they do this they will drop deeper into trance. The goal is to get the conscious mind out of the way by concentrating on scenes. Often the answers to their questions are found in the past life they see, but it is only a means to an end. The goal is to get to the subconscious which will do the work. The only way I have found to get there is to spend the first part of the session in visualization. Then they will be deep enough to call the subconscious forth.

If you could go to any place or any time, where would you go? This method has its limitations because later the person thinks they are making it up.

Future Method

On rare occasions I will take the subject into the future instead of the past, if they are having difficulty letting go of the conscious mind. During the interview I have learned enough about the person, and discovered what they want to find out during the session. Sometimes it relates to what they are doing in the immediate future. Many times they are at a crossroads and just want someone to help them find the correct path, in order to make a decision. In these cases the person, for whatever reason, will not regress to a past life, or see anything that we can use. Then as a last resort, when everything else has failed, I have them move a few years into the future, and see what they are doing, where they are working, etc. When I have done this they surprisingly find themselves in different surroundings than their present job. I explore this with them in great detail, so they can have as much information as possible. I then have them see where they will be living. Sometimes this was one of their questions: “Should I move?” Where should I move to?” Again, they often see themselves in a different place and a different house. We have even been able to see who they are married to, how they met, and do they have children (this could also have been one of their questions, if they were unmarried and looking for a mate). When they awaken and we discuss this, they usually think they have made it up, no matter how real it seemed and how much detail was shown. If the future they see was positive and agreed with their expectations, I emphasize with suggestions that this will be their future. Because, if they can see it, in detail, then they can create it. Remember, everything begins with a thought, a dream. It is a law of the universe, the “Law of Manifestation”, that if you can see it, you can create it. They just have to believe it and accept it, and it must come true, because it is obeying a natural law. Of course, this can also be true of negative things, because if the person believes something negative will happen (finances, divorce, or illness), then it will also manifest. This natural law does not distinguish. It gives the person what they desire (consciously or unconsciously). That is why it is so important to only implant positive suggestions during the trance state.

I'd like you to move a few years into the future. See what you are doing and where you are working. Can you describe this for me? (explore this with them in great detail so they can have as much information as possible). Where are you living? (if the future they see was positive and agreed with their expectation, I emphasize with suggestions that this will be their future).

Forgiveness

This is done while the person is in trance. It is to help release karma by forgiving the offending party. It can also be done while the person is awake, by having them consciously forgive.

Remind them that when they were on the spirit side before entering this life they made a plan of what they hope to accomplish in their present life. They also make contracts with people they will be involved with. If they have problems with someone in their life that they must forgive, they do not have to do this face-to-face. That is too difficult. Besides, often the person they are still angry at may have already died. So this exercise is done mentally, mind to mind.

Tell them to picture the person in their mind and say:

“We tried, we really tried, but it isn’t working. Let’s tear up the contract.”

And have them see themselves literally tearing up the contract and throwing it away.

Then say: “I forgive you. I release you. I let you go. You go your way with love, and I go my way. We don’t have to be connected anymore.”

They must really mean it, they must believe it. When they do this, they have released any karma caused by that person. When they do this the person has no power over them anymore. They cannot push the person’s buttons. Remember, most of the time it is just a game to the offending party. They know what buttons to push to get a reaction out of them. After they have been released it doesn’t work anymore. It doesn’t affect the person anymore. The karma has been paid back.

Then they have to forgive themselves. Remember, it always takes two to create the karma. This is not easy. None of this is easy, but it has to be done or they will have to return and play the game all over again, with the same people and the same circumstances. Only next time it will be harder.

A Healing Ritual

A HEALING RITUAL that can be used on the clients when they are in trance. Sometimes the practitioner may think the session is not working. They feel they are unable to contact the SC etc. Never waste the session. If the person has been under for at least an hour they are deeper than you think. They are at a stage where they are very susceptible to suggestion. You can program them or condition them very easily, and they may not even realize what you are doing. This technique is used if they have a physical problem and you are unable to break through to the SC to do the healing or a body scan.

They have a choice of two things to visualize. When you give them a choice they will always pick one or the other. They will not resist because they don't know what you are going to do. Ask them to visualize either a column of beautiful white light or a silver crystalline river of white light. When they have decided they do not have to respond anymore. (Here as an example, I will use the column of white light.) Have them see the column of white light coming down from above and entering into the crown chakra. Then direct the light to move down through the chakras one by one. As the light moves through each chakra tell it to look for anything in that part of the body that is out of balance or harmony. Then ask the light to bring it back into balance and harmony. Move it through each chakra in turn and ask it to also go into every single cell in that part of the body and bring it back into balance and harmony and perfect health. After you have moved it through all of the chakras then emphasize that the body now has exactly the right amount of energy that it needs to remain in balance and harmony. Any excess energy that is not needed by the body is then passed off through the legs and feet. I send it out into the universe for anyone to use that may need energy.

I had one client that wanted to see it as a silver river of light, and she wanted to lie down in it and let it flow through her body. Whatever works, use it.

This method takes a while to do and involves a lot of repetition. In hypnosis, suggestions and conditioning is always done by repeating the suggestion again and again. This ingrains it into the mind of the client. You will notice that when you start this procedure the client will become very still and you can tell they are listening to every word. So don't waste the session. They are getting healing whether they realize it or not. They will not fight it and will cooperate with you. I don't prefer this method because I like to interact with the SC and get its feedback as it goes through the body and does the healing. But it is better than nothing. At least the client is getting something out of the session, and many tell me afterwards that they did feel energy going through their body. Sometimes it feels like heat.

This method can also be used by anyone as a self-healing method. It is best done while in a meditative state where they can quiet the body and direct the light through the body. If there are specific areas in the body that need help, then they can focus on that part by directing the light to focus there.

Remember to talk to your body, your cells and your organs. Tell the body how much you love it and what a wonderful job it is doing. Remember that within you there is an entire universe. When you talk to it you are the voice of God to that universe. And it will listen to you. It is as though, "Wow! Somebody is noticing me. Somebody appreciates what I am doing." And it will cooperate with you.
